

Sweat it Out

Working out has never looked so good. For the first time in Paris a gym has opened up in a historical monument, inviting sports enthusiasts into a unique space to work out. The posh gym chain, L'Usine, has opened its third address in the Gare Saint-Lazare train station in the heart of the city. The well-equipped gym is an open invitation to working out a sweat in style in the French capital. - S.I.

Green Beauty

Our beauty routine is going green with the help of the new Le Green Market space at Printemps de la Beauté. The famous department store has just inaugurated a new space in its beauty section dedicated to organic beauty products.

The green area puts the spotlight on brands that are kind to both our skin and the environment such as Zao, an organic and vegan cosmetics brand packaging all its beauty products in reusable bamboo palettes so you can simply buy refills for your blush, powder or highlighter. Le Green Market also welcomes Antipodes into its fold with the brand hailing from New Zealand offering organic and vegan cosmetics and skincare products including the Heavenly Body Oil with avocado oil, lavender and jasmine petal. - S.I.

The Place London in Paris

The recent opening of Simon Burstein's Parisian branch of The Place London marks quite the fashionable coup for fashionistas in the fashion capital. The multi-brand boutique offers ladies a wonderful selection of brands found exclusively at The Place London including Poustovit, a contemporary brand that draws from its Ukrainian origins with ethnic prints. Other brands found here include Ioanna Salea for Italian-made bags and Alice Archer for embroidered dresses. - S.I.
